

Kant and Buddhism – Old Notes as it is called in Kyoto School

By Shomit Sirohi

I. Nishida

In fact Nishida Kitaro has three works in Kant and Buddhism, just three notes as a reconstruction done in simple objective take of it as it were –

Inquiry into be Good is Dhamma and daily life, it is always the story. Kant is that method one needs, to teach or be educated.

Place and Dialectic then is Buddhism – a type of house, and people in a health-care support, and daily life in that sense of place.

Other works – all uniting the two into stories of Good and stories of Place.

II. Kant and Buddhism with Nishida

Let us place in these works of Nishida a number of stories, Tibetan Buddhism argues.

I place a table of Kantian typologies in formalism – like a form.

Imagine it as a formalism of Good people and Stories of Ethics – that is Tathagata and even Mahayana Buddhist meanings of Life, one can change this to Good for women, or even tea and good health for Good people.

Stories in methodical formalism of a simple mode of exchange – its context as modes of life – within Magada – a simple Japanese Story format.